Over the past three decades, public health has faced numerous challenges, from infectious disease outbreaks and environmental health crises to persistent health inequities and the increasing burden of chronic diseases.

This year's event will highlight actionable strategies, innovative solutions, and community-driven initiatives aimed at building sustainable systems for the future of public health. Together, we will reflect on lessons learned, tackle current challenges, and chart a course forward toward a healthier, more equitable New Jersey.

Engage with experts and public health colleagues in meaningful discussions and contribute to long-term, impactful change!
